Female education is a catchall term for a complex of issues and debates surrounding education for females. It includes areas of gender equality and access to education, and its connection to the alleviation of poverty. Improving girls' educational levels has been demonstrated to have clear impacts on the health and economic future of young women, which in turn improves the prospects of their entire community. In the poorest countries of the world, 50% of girls do not attend secondary school. Improving female education, and thus women's earning potential, improves the standard of living for their own children, as women invest more of their income in their families than men do. Yet, many barriers to education for girls remain. Once women began to graduate from institutions of higher education, there steadily developed also a stronger academic stream of schooling, and the teacher training of women in larger numbers, principally to provide primary education. While it was not common for women to enroll as students in formal classes, it was common for women to attend informal lectures and study sessions. There were no legal restrictions on female education.

Enlightenment is a spiritual image of a person that is created under the influence of moral and spiritual values, which compose the essence of his cultural circle. It is a process of upbringing, self-education and impact; in other words, it is a process of personality formation. Moreover, the main aspect is not the knowledge gained, but its connection to personal qualities, the ability to use the knowledge for the good.

Children happily received the School Material for the Academic Year 2012-2013. By the support of the Donors of Global Giving, which encourages children go to school. We extend our deep gratitude to all the donors for the benevolent support.
