REPORT

Utilization of Local Resources – Fresh Fruit Juice Processing

Local fresh fruit processing is one of the ways FORUDEF assist local women – single mothers inclusive in the quest to alleviate poverty and improve on the nutrition in young children and households. Some of the juice processed is used for home consumption and some for sale. Pictured below is Chantal trained by the FORUDEF family. Chantal has developed interest in receiving training on juice processing at home. Chantal is the daughter of a single mother who lives in a village far off from the city. By processing juice and selling, Chantal is able to support her basic school needs. Chantal is pictured demonstrating her skills in juice processing and bottling.

Chantal processes pineapple and paw-paw juice

Preserved bottled juice in the fridge

"I am grateful for the support from the Global Giving donors through FORUDEF to enable me learn how to process juice at home". "The income from the sale of juice helps me to support my education". Chantal

We have been able to train 25 young women in this art of juice processing at home, and would like to do more. Through the sale of juice we are able to support our office running costs.

Without you we would not be able to train Chantal in this art. We owe gratitude to our donors. Many young struggling girls would find home juice processing and reliable source of immediate income for basic needs. Expansion of this project to other local communities is our desire. We are grateful for your continuous support.