How does it work?

Social Rugby generate meetings in different regions of the country calling for all organizations or clubs in the area that have strong resource problems, difficulties in generating competition and play a significant social role in their territories.

In the meetings we organize matches between the various divisions of the teams, adapting to the sports competition reality of each group. Participants share not only parties but also food, games and recreational days in which through playful face the exercise of values such as solidarity, companionship and teamwork, with the sense of stimulating the exchange and integration among boys who come from different provinces and social realities. Encounters involved children and young people, when it comes to male Rugby, and add female Rugby in cases where organizations Social Rugby have women 's teams in order to further expand access to sport based on criteria equality.

The first major event was a National Meeting held in Tigre in 2013. Until mid-2016 more than 10 encounters were implemented in various regions of the country and involved more than 4,000 children. After more than three years of investigation and research, we have managed to record the existence of more than 90 clubs and organizations that perform or develop Rugby in neighborhoods, towns and communities of indigenous peoples, many of which are almost isolated geographically and needs institutionally, they have not been fully included within the development policies of some local Rugby Unions.
