

A Place to Belong: Children in Families

“What once was shelter is now a home.”

A major milestone in this period has been the consolidation of our family-based care model individualized attention, emotional support, and a stable environment that promotes healthy development. Children who were previously living in institutional settings are now growing up in foster families, where they receive support, and a stable environment that promotes healthy development. This transition has resulted in visible improvements in their emotional security, social skills, and quality of life.

“Every child deserves more than survival—they deserve love.”

“All children are now actively participating in daily family routines such as meals, school activities, and celebrations.”

• “We observed improvements in self-esteem, emotional expression, and sense of belonging .

• “Children show greater confidence and emotional security in their family environments.”

“You are part of their new beginning.”

Thank you!
