Annex II: Success Story:

AICA's response efforts to the earthquakes that struck South Türkiye and North Syria were successful in providing vital household items and hygiene kits to affected families. The organization worked in collaboration with the Syrian Red Crescent, Syrian Trust for Development and Alsawary Association to ensure that their relief efforts were effective in reaching those who needed them the most.

By focusing on the western coast of Syria, where coverage was negligible, AICA was able to provide support to those who were not being reached by other fundraising campaigns. This support was essential given the destruction that occurred, which caused a total cut in electricity, lack of sanitation, and hundreds of casualties.

AICA's distribution efforts were carried out family by family within the shelter centers, and the organization provided essential items like sanitary pads, diapers, and hand sanitizers to 500 women, 500 children between 1 and 6 years old, and 100 elderly individuals.

AICA also identified additional areas where support was crucial, including psychosocial support for children and women and minor wash projects in the affected areas. These efforts are essential for the long-term health and wellbeing of those affected by the earthquakes.

Overall, AICA's response efforts demonstrate a successful collaboration between international and local organizations to provide vital relief efforts in times of crisis. Through their efforts, AICA has helped alleviate the suffering of those affected by the disaster, and they continue to work towards providing ongoing support to those in need.
