ADDED VALUE OF COMMUNITY PHILANTHROPY

THE ADDED VALUE FOR THE COMMUNITY

Protagonist of change: the community builds its own local development objectives and goals.

The community is made visible through its potential and not through what it lacks.

Local organizations and initiatives and social investors build trust among themselves

They influence, facilitate, enable and manage advocacy in public policy on behalf of the interests of the community.

Builds coordination and collaboration among diverse actors that pursue collective purposes and shared goals of development and social impact in the territory.

THE ADDED VALUE FOR LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS AND INITIATIVES

Sustainability, resilience and durability for the local ecosystem over the long term.

They value their knowledge and track record in the territory as a relevant asset.

They increase and improve the flow of resources to expand impact

They connect with other networks and potential social investors and allies.

They give visibility to local processes and initiatives.

THE ADDED VALUE FOR SOCIAL INVESTORS

Sustainability of the investment

because it is a practice that seeks to increase the capacity of the local ecosystem of organizations to endure over the long term.

Being part of a shared commitment with others where there is co-investment in the territory.

Increasing the value of the investment

because the contribution of families, organizations and companies goes toward building greater resource mobilization and collective impact

Dialogue and connection between the social investor and the diverse actors working in the territory in favor of collective work.

They guarantee transparent and efficient accountability because it has been shown that trust-based philanthropy is successful.

A group of people, mostly wearing face masks, are gathered in a community space. Some are standing and talking, while others are seated at a table. In the background, a sign on the wall reads 'APRENDIMIENTO LOCAL' (Local Learning). The scene is dimly lit with a blue tint, and a red rectangular border frames the central text.
